Six Research-Backed Strategies for Remote Teaching

According to Amy Takabori at Scientific Learning, educators have shared a plethora of creative ideas for effective distance learning. In addition to these resources, educators might also be interested in what researchers have learned through systematic studies. Here are six research-backed strategies for elementary, middle, and high school teachers who are teaching remotely:

Involve Parents, Especially by Strengthening Academic Expectations:

1. Highlight student achievements to parents.
2. Have parents sign off on daily agendas.
3. Arrange weekly virtual chats with parents.

Assign Group Work (Middle and High School):

1. Design projects that require each group member's unique contribution.
2. Use collaborative digital spaces.
3. Provide clear instructions as to what collaboration should look like.

Complimentary Public Health Curriculum

To continue support of educators and students, Education Associates is providing complimentary access to two of our key Public Health Programs: Personal Hygiene, Passive Recreation. We encourage you to share this Newsletter with colleagues and parents who have children at home during the temporary school closures.

Job Skills & Life Skills at Home or Online Classroom

At Education Associates, we recognize that the physical facilities for many schools are temporarily closed and that education is continuing in homes around the country. To help our current and future customers, we have created a guide to using our job and life skills titles remotely.

Teachers and parents are encouraged to utilize the curriculum and materials for our hands-on Project Discovery and Achieve Life Skills titles in any setting, including at home or in an online classroom.
