Consider how to incorporate some of the National Dropout Prevention Network's 15 Strategies for Effective Dropout Prevention:

Active Learning

Active learning engages and involves the student in the learning process! Hands-on activities, technology, creative problem-solving and examining different learning methods all encourage students to be active learners.

Educational Technology

The delivery of instruction through technology engages students and helps address multiple learning styles.

Individualized Instruction

Individualization allows for flexibility in instruction and learning! Curriculum that incorporates differentiated instruction addresses each student's unique interests and learning styles.

Career & Technical Education

CTE makes learning relevant and allows all students to see the connection between school and work.

School-Community Collaboration

Invite community employers to address your students virtually! Community leaders can share what they like about their industry, the skills that they use, and the attributes that they look for in employees.
