Creating Classrooms Where Every Student Can Succeed

Inclusive education is about more than placing students in the same classroom. It means providing meaningful opportunities to participate, learn alongside peers, develop relationships, and make progress toward individual goals.

Educators can support ALL students through several practical approaches:

Use visual supports. Real-life pictures, visual schedules, and video modeling can help students understand expectations and follow multistep activities.

Make learning hands-on. Provide opportunities to practice real on the job skills, with real tools, in the classroom, can make abstract concepts easier to understand and remember.

Break tasks into manageable steps. Teaching one step at a time, providing clear directions, and gradually reducing prompts can help students build competence and confidence.

Connect learning to real life. Activities involving money, time, communication, personal care, cooking, shopping, safety, and community participation help students apply what they learn beyond the classroom.

Promote independence. Educators should provide enough support for students to succeed while encouraging them to make choices, solve problems, and complete tasks as independently as possible.
